RESEARCH INTERESTS

Gastrointestinal microbiology; fermentation and fuel ethanol production; experimental archaeology

Much of my biological research to date has focused on the microbiological communities that live within the guts of herbivorous animals. I have studied the fermentative and enzymatic properties of these gut symbionts, as well as their nutritional contributions to their hosts. I have also investigated the conversion of locally grown crops into fuel ethanol. In this area of study, I attempt to optimize the fermentation, distillation, and dehydration of ethanol from non-traditional feedstocks, such as sugarcane and sorghum.
