Need a team of 3. Teams can consist of up to six players, only three of whom would participate in any given round. Participants must be "students in good standing," which means you. You must list a faculty member as your coach/sponsor.

It works like this: Teams are asked a series of toss-up questions and respond using a “lockout” buzzer system supplied by the university. Speed matters! The individual team member who buzzes in first, receives the first chance to answer the tossup question. A correct answer nets his or her team points, plus an exclusive chance to answer a multi-part bonus question which may be answered by any member of the team, individually or in consultation. An incorrect answer sends the tossup question to the opposing team, which then has a chance to answer and steal the bonus questions. Matches are made up of two halves, each consisting of 12 tossup questions. Tied matches move to a three-question overtime, and, if necessary, to a sudden-death round.
